As most readers of Te Kura Ngahere are already aware, the School of Forestry at Canterbury College is to close its doors temporarily, due to financial stringency, at the end of the current year. Publication of the journal by Canterbury College will, therefore, cease with this issue.

Arrangements have been made, however, for the New Zealand Institute of Foresters to take over the journal as a going concern, and to continue its publication as the official organ of the Institute. The transfer of control will take effect immediately. Both the exchange and the subscription lists will be carried on by the Institute, and exchange publications received by the Editor will be deposited in the School of Forestry library, to maintain series intact until the reopening of the school.

To facilitate the transfer, it is asked that all outstanding subscriptions for this and previous issues be sent to the Registrar, Canterbury College, at earliest convenience.

The Editor, in severing his connection with Te Kura Ngahere, acknowledges his deep obligation to all who have helped in the production of the journal over the past ten years of its existence, and extends best wishes to the new Editorial Committee, and to all colleagues in the profession of Forestry in this country.
